

ANDY DENIES GOVERNMENT SPONSORSHIP OF HIS TRUTH CAMPAIGN

Asheem Aggarwal Thursday, July 1, 2010 at 12:18 am

Andy,

I really enjoyed your interview with Jessica Mystic and I am all onboard with what you have reported.

I am a bit mystified how you are allowed to release this information without repercussions. It almost seems it was accepted that this was your role as foretold but I don't get why you seemed to have been guided to do so by the government. So this confuses me a bit.

I am sure that this is a common question, so pardon me if I have not come across your thoughts on this.

Asheem

Andrew D. Basiago Thursday, July 1, 2010 at 11:50 am

Asheem,

I have not been guided in any way to wage my truth campaign – by the US government or any party. It is my mission – undertaken by me. As for government involvement, in 2003, the Bush Administration informed me via a representative of the Executive Office of the White House with whom I met that if I didn't stop researching, writing about, and talking about the secret time travel technologies that I was exposed to as a child in Project Pegasus, they couldn't "guarantee my survival." Then, in 2005, a career CIA officer said that if I did go public with my information, then they wouldn't do anything to oppose me. But they didn't encourage me or guide me to come forward in any way. I had already started to lecture about my experiences in 2004, therefore, they knew that I was stepping forward. My truth campaign is my own work, taken upon myself, funded and carried out by me personally. So, don't be mystified. Sometimes individuals perform courageous acts, even when it means opposing powerful forces.

All the best, Andy